The MCL Conference Facility at Heritage Center

"Linking Technology to Solutions"

MCL provides consultation and testing services in support of industrial forensics, materials characterization, environmental chemistry, and process optimization.

The Heritage Center, located at the southwestern end of the Oak Ridge reservation, is home to the historic K-25 plant. Building K-25 was constructed during the Manhattan Project to use a gaseous diffusion method to separate uranium-235 from uranium-238.

For thousands of employees, visitors and dignitaries who entered K-25 for many years during the cold war and reindustrialization periods, the small building, K-1000, at the main entrance served as the entry and security checkpoint. That building has been officially renamed The MCL Conference Facility at Heritage Center, and opened as a meeting facility for the community to utilize for conferences, seminars or special events.
